

I chose to join the Honors Program at Minnesota State University, Mankato because I wanted to be part of a group of students who had similar goals and motivations. I like being around people who take their work seriously, because it helps me stay focused on my own goals. I thought honors would give me a community where I could push myself a little more and stay on track, instead of feeling like I'm doing everything on my own.

Another reason I joined honors was to experience new things. I didn't want my college routine to feel repetitive or like I was just going through the motions. The program seemed like a good way to challenge myself with different kinds of classes and activities. I want to learn in ways that go beyond the usual assignments, whether that means working on projects, participating in discussions, or trying things I normally wouldn't think to do.

I also believe the Honors Program will have a positive impact on my overall experience at MNSU. College can get busy really fast, and it's easy to fall behind or lose motivation. Being in honors gives me more structure and helps me stay organized with my classes. The smaller classes and closer interaction with instructors make it easier to stay engaged. I like the idea of having a community that supports each other academically, because that makes the whole college experience feel more connected.

When it comes to personal and professional growth, I think being in honors will help me develop skills I'll need later on. Personally, I want to get better at managing my time, taking initiative, and staying consistent with my work. Professionally, I know the program will help me improve my communication and problem-solving skills. These are things that will matter in any career, so getting practice with them now is important. Being in honors also helps show that I'm willing to put in extra effort and take on challenges, which can help me in the future.

Overall, I joined the Honors Program because I want to get more out of my time at MNSU. I want to be part of a community, stay focused on my goals, and push myself to keep improving. I'm hoping the program helps me stay motivated, try new things, and grow in ways that will benefit me both in college and after I graduate.
